

The Impact of the Great Depression and Hoover Dam on America

By: Eric Dahn

FALL 2016

CIEP 475

Workshop-Teaching with Primary Sources Course

Background

This lesson will help students work toward mastery on reading and writing learning objectives. It will introduce students to nonfiction text structures and how these structures can assist with understanding the nonfiction text. This will occur by using a highly engaging nonfiction text that uses multiple text structures. Additionally, students will continue practicing their writing craft by responding to an essential question in essay format. This is a skill that was introduced very early in the school year and continues to be practiced regularly with texts that students have read.

This lesson also integrates with the study of regions in a fourth grade social studies curriculum. Using Primary Sources and the nonfiction text, students will deepen their understanding of the Great Depression's impact on Americans and their decision to move west. The work with primary sources will be a continuation as students have previously been instructed on the use of a Primary Source Analysis Tool for primary sources applicable to the Social Studies curriculum. Additionally, this lesson helps define the western region as students identify the significance of the Hoover Dam.

Observe	All observations were accurate and plausible for the primary source. Did NOT make inferences about the primary source.	Some observations were accurate and plausible for the primary source. Minimal amount of observations were inferences about the primary source.	Few observations were accurate and plausible for the primary source. Too many observations were inferences about the primary source.	Did not make observations or all observations were actually inferences about the primary source.
Reflect	All reflections were accurate and plausible for the primary source and observations.	Some reflections were accurate and plausible for the primary source and observations.	Few reflections were accurate and plausible for the primary source and observations.	Did not make reflections that were accurate and plausible for the primary source and observations.
Question	Asked 3 or more questions that were plausible for the primary source.	Asked 2 questions that were plausible for the primary source.	Asked 1 question that were plausible for the primary source.	Did not ask questions that were plausible for the primary source.

Constructed Response Rubric

	Beginning 1 point	Approaching 2 points	Secure 3 points
Restate	The question is not restated.	The question is restated, but not as clearly as it could be.	The question is clearly restated/reworded in the response. The reader knows what to expect.
Answer	The answer is incorrect.	The answer is partially correct.	The question is answered correctly.
Cite	At least one example is provided but does not support the answer.	One relevant example from the text is provided and fully supports the answer.	Two or more relevant details from the text are provided and fully support the answer.
Explain	Explanation attempt does not relate to examples and/or support the answer.	The explanation attempts to supply reasoning and/or inferencing which supports the answer and relates to the examples.	The explanation supplies reasoning and/or inferencing which strongly supports the answer.
Statement of Learning	There is an attempt to state what was learned but does not relate to the overall big idea/theme.	There is a statement of learning but it does not clearly link back to the answer.	The statement of learning clearly links back to the answer.
Edit	There are many errors in spelling, grammar, capitalization, punctuation, and sentence structure.	There are some errors in spelling, grammar, capitalization, punctuation, and sentence structure.	There are few errors in spelling, grammar, capitalization, punctuation, and sentence structure.
